The Almighty Sometimes

by Kendall Feaver

Tuesday, 25th June — Thursday, 27th June, 7pm

Preview: Monday, 24th June, 7pm

Matinee: Thursday, 27th June, 1pm

Studio Two

"I've been on those pills for so long, I don't know who I am without them, if the things I say or do are because of the medication or in spite of it – but what I do know is that before you put me on them I could write. It is the only thing I know about myself that is true, or real, or in any way authentic"

Diagnosed with a severe mental illness as a child, Anna has been on medication for so long she can't remember who she is without it. All she knows is that, as a little girl, she was a prodigious writing talent, in possession of a thrilling imagination. Has this been lost to years of pills and prescriptions? Now 18, Anna is determined to find out. Walking the line between control and care, her mother Renee, has always been at her side, keeping her safe.

On the precipice of a new chapter, both women struggle to find their place. Will they find a balance where both can thrive or will their delicate ecosystem collapse under these new pressures?

Kendall Feaver's multi-award-winning play is a heartfelt drama filled with humour, pain and a little bit of magic. A play about mothers and daughters, caretakers and finding yourself amongst all the labels.

The Almighty Sometimes was first performed at the Royal Exchange Theatre, Manchester (UK) as a winner of the 2015 Bruntwood Prize for Playwriting on February 9th, 2018, directed by Katy Rudd.

Preview: Tuesday, 25th June, 7.30pm

Matinee: Friday, 28th June, 1pm

How do we grieve?
What do we owe the dead?
Does art betray the love it seeks to honour?
Is any memory of love not informed by mourning?

Who would win in a battle between language and music, and does there need to be a battle?

Where lies the common ground between life and death?
What secrets are kept and whispered
in the rain?
When does grief become a sin?

In how many languages can we say I love you? In which can we understand it?

How does a person remember to forget?
What use is a love letter from beyond the grave?

In the wake of tragedy, what has happened?

Water.
Why has it happened?

Water.
What of justice?

Water.
Why anything?

Because water.

If you love, do you turn?
If you love, do you say good-bye?
Exploring questions about grief and loss, Sarah Ruhl's 2003 play, Eurydice, breathes new life into the classic Greek myth. This poignant telling follows Eurydice's journey through the underworld after her sudden death.
